

Play to Your Strengths: Focus on What You Do Best and Success Will Follow

Donald Clifton and Paula Nelson draw on more than 40 years of research with leading companies to arrive at their do what you do best strategy, which involves finding out what you do well and doing more of it, and finding out what you don't do well and discontinuing it. The authors realized that most people are encouraged to work on their weaknesses, not their strengths, and that this can reduce the strengths and lead to a negative self-concept. The book urges businesses and managers to change their approach and focus on strengths, using the approach to manage people, increase productivity and identify corporate strategy.

Follow your passion and you will be successful. You should play to your strengths and work to develop your knowledge in that area. Instead of focusing only on the things you are good at, work to develop a range of skills. There is mounting evidence that playing to your strengths at work not only than addressing your weaknesses, can make you happier and more successful at work.
